² At close range, a single torpedo was fired at HMS Aboukir by German submarine U-9. The torpedo broke the ship's back, and she sank within 20 minutes with the loss of 527 men. The captains of HMS Cressy and HMS Hogue thought Aboukir had struck a floating mine and came forward to assist her. They stood by and began to pick up survivors. At this point, U-9 fired two torpedoes into Hogue, mortally wounding that ship. As Hogue sank, the captain of Cressy realised that the squadron was being attacked by a submarine, and tried to flee. However, U-9 fired two more torpedoes into Cressy, and sank her as well. The entire battle had lasted less than two hours, and cost the British three warships, 62 officers and 1,397 ratings.

⁷ Built 1891 as a first class passenger ship named the Cheshire and later used during the Boer War as a troopship. In 1910, the Cheshire was sold renamed Seang Choon. In 1915 the Seang Choon became a British army troopship, afterwards a hospital ship and took part in the Dardanelles campaign. On the 10th July 1917, in Bantry Bay on the South Coast of Ireland, whilst on a voyage from Sydney to London, she was torpedoed and sunk by German submarine U-87. Nineteen lives were lost.

Died from Toxic Neuritis. Was to have joined Shackleton Expedition.

¹⁰ Many deaths in this year, 1918, are from illness caused by the epidemic of Spanish influenza.

¹² HMS Hampshire was present at the Battle of Jutland and a few days later was sailing to Russia with the Secretary of State for War, Field Marshal Lord Kitchener, when she is believed to have struck a mine laid by a German submarine. The detonation had holed the cruiser between bows and bridge, and the lifeboats were smashed against the side of the ship by the heavy seas when they were lowered. About 15 minutes after the explosion, Hampshire sank by the bows. Of 600 personnel aboard only 12 men on Carley floats managed to reach the shore. Lord Kitchener and his staff were lost.

¹⁵ HMS Goliath sank during the Dardanelles Campaign by Turkish torpedo-boat destroyer which was manned by German and Turkish crew, taking 570 of the crew of 700 went to the bottom.

²⁴ HMS Otranto collided with HMS Kashmir, another liner turned troopship, in poor visibility in the rough seas between the North East coast of Ireland and the Western Isles of Scotland. She was holed on the port side forward and, in the heavy swell, began to list. The stricken ship then hit rocks and became grounded. With the heavy seas pounding her continually against the rocks the ship eventually broke up and sank with the loss of 431 lives including members of the US Navy and Army.

anti-torpedo nets, striking Majestic and causing a huge explosion. The ship began to list to port and in nine minutes had capsized in 54 feet (16 m) of water, killing 49 men. Her masts hit the mud of the sea bottom, and her upturned hull remained visible for many months until it was finally submerged when her foremast collapsed during a storm.

³³ On January 13th 1915 Viknor set sail from Londonderry in Ireland, and headed out into the Irish Sea to make for her patrol area. On board her were 22 Officers and 273 Ratings mostly from the Royal Navy Reserve. The weather was bad and the sea was very choppy indeed. HMS Viknor never reached her patrol zone, a search of the area was made and scattered wreckage was found in the sea. There were no survivors. Mystery surrounds her sinking, it was thought at first that a U Boat had sunk her, however German records showed that no such craft were in the area until the end of January. It was officially recorded that HMS Viknor has been destroyed by an enemy mine, somewhere of Tory Island and that no one had survived.

³⁴ HMS Hogue, along with HMS Cressy went to the aid of HMS Aboukir who they thought had hit a floating mine, when indeed it had been hit by a German U-boat, U-9. As they stood by and began to pick up survivors, torpedoes from U-9 struck Hogue and she then sank. The Surgeon and 2 Sick Berth staff were rescued. The entire battle had lasted less than two hours, and cost the British three warships, 62 officers and 1,397 ratings.

³⁷ HMS Princess Irene, an ocean liner built in 1914 and requisitioned by the RN on completion and converted to an auxiliary minelayer. Moored in Saltpan Reach on the Medway estuary, whilst being loaded with mines, she exploded and disintegrated. The explosion was larger than that which had destroyed HMS Bulwark six months earlier, although the loss of life was less. A total of 352 people were killed, including 273 officers and men, and 76 dockyard workers who were on board Princess Irene. The sole survivor from Princes Irene was a stoker, who suffered severe burns. Three of her crew had a lucky escape as they were ashore at the time.

³⁹ Q-ships, also known as Q-boats, decoy vessels, special service ships, or mystery ships, were heavily armed merchant ships with concealed weaponry, designed to lure submarines into making surface attacks. This gave Q-ships the chance to open fire and sink them. The basic ethos of every Q-ship was to be a wolf in sheep's clothing. They were used by the Royal Navy during the First & Second World Wars as a countermeasure against German U-boats and Japanese submarines.

⁴⁰ The White Star liner RMS Laurentic was in Montreal when the Great War began and was immediately commissioned as a troop transport for the Canadian Expeditionary Force. In 1915 she converted to an armed merchant cruiser. On 25th January 1917 she struck a mine off Lough Swilly on the northern coast of County Donegal, Ireland and ⁴¹ On 12 January 1918, Opal joined her sister ship Narborough and the light cruiser Boadicea in a night patrol to hunt German auxiliary warships suspected to be laying mines on the Scottish coast. By 17:30, the weather had deteriorated to such an extreme degree that the destroyers were in danger of swamping and foundering and visibility was near zero. Fearing that her companions might sink, Boadicea ordered Opal and Narborough back to Scarpa Flow while she continued alone. For the next four hours, Opal regularly sent reports indicating her course and intention to return, but at 21:27, a garbled message stating have run aground was received, followed by silence. The weather was so atrocious that no vessels could be despatched until the following morning, and it was two days before Opal was found, battered, broken and empty on the Clett of Crura. Narborough was found in a similar position nearby. Both wrecks were abandoned and broken up by the sea over the next few weeks taking the bodies of both crews (91 from Narborough and 96 from Opal), bar the single survivor, with them.

⁴² MFA Ermine was a steamer which plied between Glasgow and Dublin in pre-war days carrying 300 saloon passengers and 700 cattle. Used as troopship to France and then carrying troops into Salonika and casualties away (She logged in all about 200,000 passengers and 3,000 horses). She is believed to have struck a mine leaving Salonika harbour (today called Thessalonika) and sank in two and half minutes with the loss of 60 lives including 23 naval personnel.

⁴³ HMS Cressy, along with HMS Hogue, went to the aid of HMS Aboukir who they thought had hit a floating mine, when indeed it had been hit by a German U-boat, U-9. As they stood by and began to pick up survivors, two torpedoes from U-9 struck Cressy and she then sank. The entire battle had lasted less than two hours, and cost the British three warships, 62 officers and 1,397 ratings.

⁴⁴ HMHS Rohilla, on route to Scarpa Flow, foundered off the coast of Whitby. Being close to shore, a line rescue was attempted but such was the weather conditions many could not be saved.
